

Anselm Turmeda 8
Barcelona 08016
telf.: 93.359.57.35 - 93.276.01.56
<http://www.fundacion-dr-jordi-mas.org>
fundacion_mas_manjon@intercom.es

ESSAY (chapter I)
The threat, first constituent factor:
Fear Factors and development, it originated in thought.
Dataset:
Article: (FEAR PATHOLOGY)

*

(*) Cognitive Research Department

Abstract:

In this first chapter of the assay, we show a preamble on the first factor of fear, it is the threat.

Of learned fear, a residue of the ancestral fear of survival, both related, but both very different.

What is its origin, cause. That has linkages with human subjectivity. How can we understand the implications for human development.

Show potential to be educated about it.

(chapter I)

It was necessary to expose in an assay, which had investigated on the development of fear in the cognitive laboratory of our Foundation.

In this chapter, we examine the causes of what we designate as fear (threat)

Fear is an irrational reaction, now, we must remember that in the distant past, fear was something necessary for survival, so it is necessary to distinguish the fear of survival and fear acquired by subjective or social habituation an relative reality.

Where the fear originates, what is the cause? Fear is a consequence, and the consequence is caused by thought, a thought that is a continuous change in structure of a mind without ipseity.

The basic factors of fear, it investigated and shown in the previous article published, these factors are personal helplessness (subjective), threat and uncertainty.

The factor of threat originates as a byproduct of ipseity mind without a thought as a fluctuating structure in subjective change.

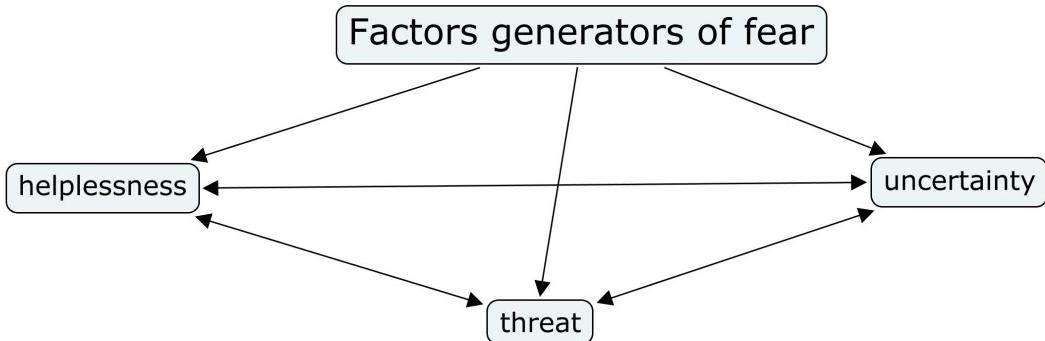

The causes of the threat may be real, but the subjective mode of experience, this is a thought, a subjective and relative substrate.

Is a substrate relative because it depends on the representation of the real world and subsequent subjective description of the event itself.

In the process of thinking, every thought is causal structure of subjective effects of substrate relative, since each description is dependent on other structures of previous thoughts, experiences transformed into memories of earlier descriptions of subjective representations, this results in the subjective grounds for of new descriptions, all forms multiple possibilities in experiencing the threat.

Factors generators of fear:
by concept maps.

Mapa Conceptual Copyright
Foundation 's Mas i Manjon

<2009>

<http://www.fundacion-dr-jordi-mas.org>

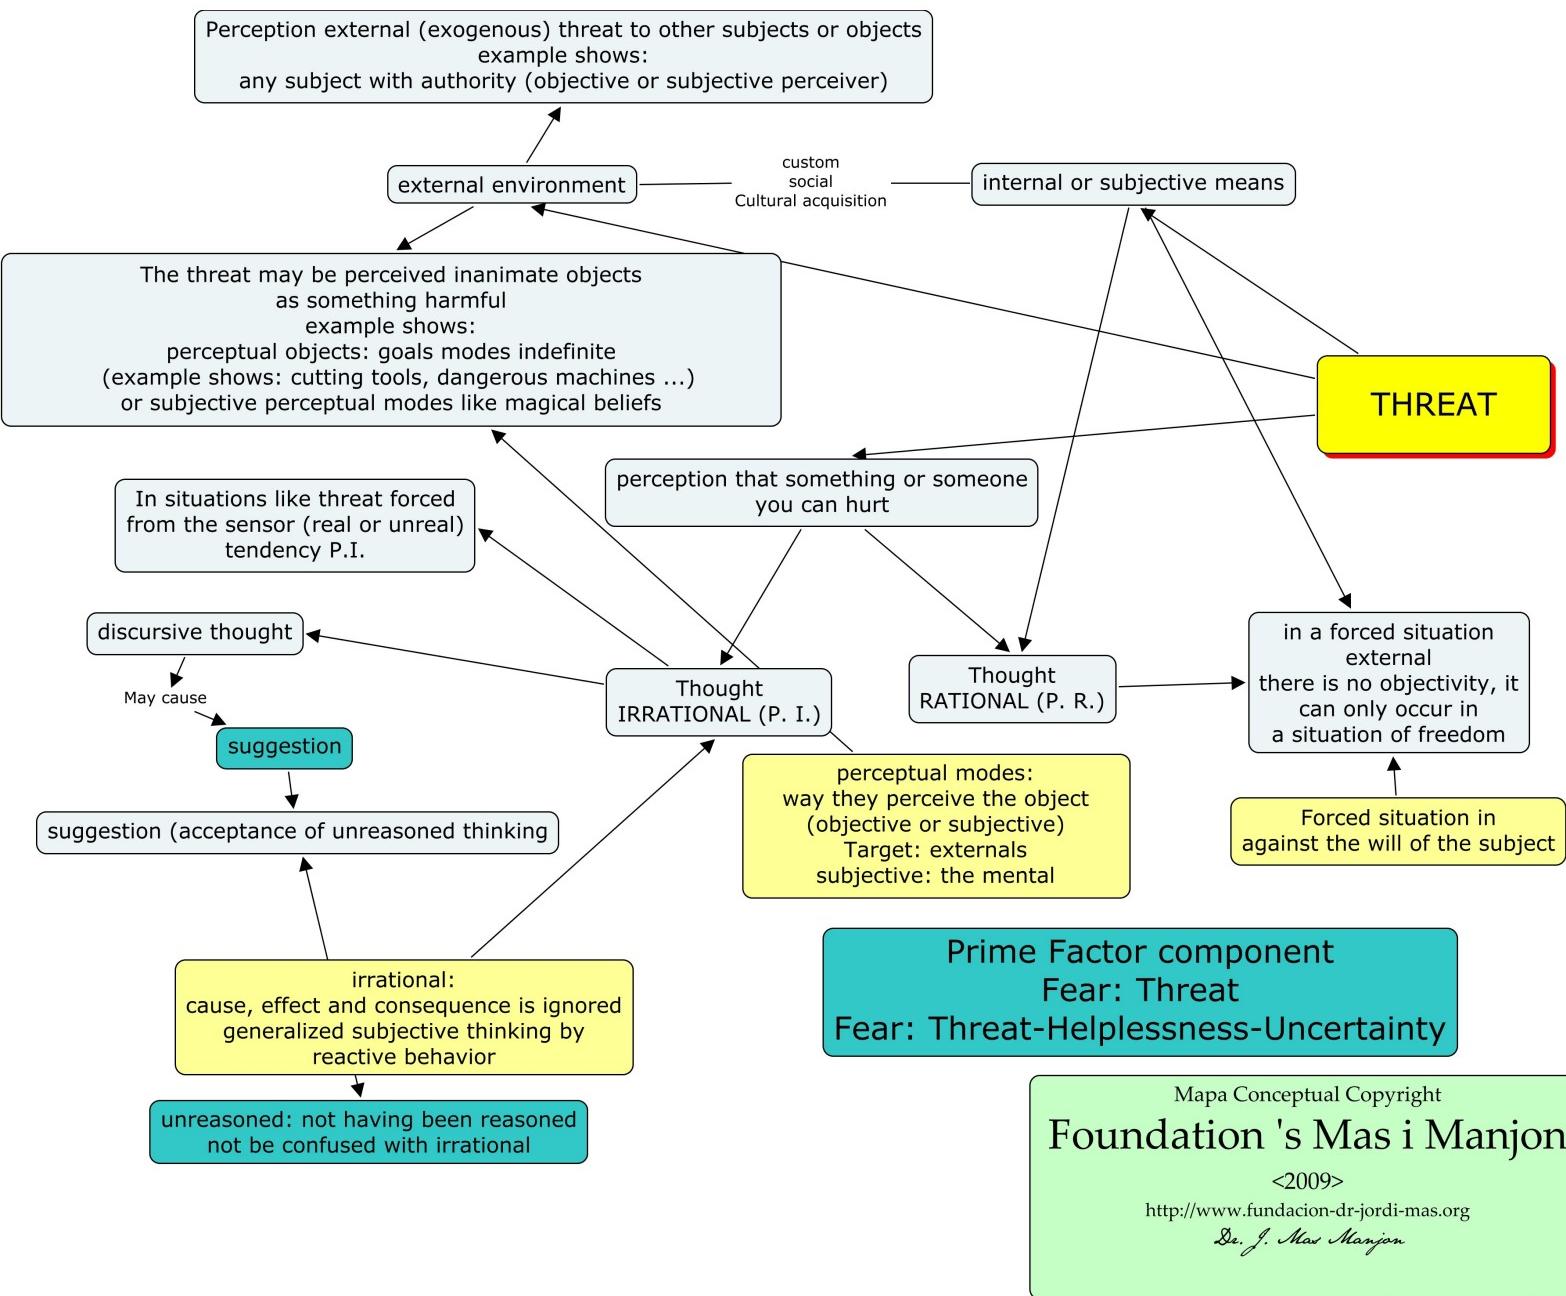

Dr. J. Mas Manjon

The threat of subjective is a thought structure that can be caused by a real event or an imagined event. The difference is caused by the description of the representation, and this representation is sustained based on a real memory, but relative.

This relativity directs us to a cause that this can be caused only by an experienced thought, the human being but this not understood by other human beings, because it is a subjective relative experience.

Socially, there is a relative social reality, it is different than subjective relative reality, the relative social realities, we formed into a structure thought subjective, it conditions a common understanding.

So threats can be individual or collective, or social.

However, the basic nature of the threat, in both. It is a subjective thought structure caused by a mind without ipseity.

This leads to the conditionings. The conditionings are the acceptances of unreasoned, causing irrational reactions. This reactions are not answers.

Así que el primer factor del miedo es una reacción condicionada, una irracionalidad.

So the first factor is a conditioned fear reaction, an irrationality.

Now it is possible to develop a research hypothesis probable. Can decondition this first factor of fear, threat? yes, because initial meaning, it was irrational, it was a reaction, so it decondition mode, it is through the response and not reaction.

The education of different factors, like us we explained in our previous article about fear, it is possible. educating factor to factor this in and finally the complete structure.

In this first chapter of the assay, we have shown the preamble of the first factor of fear, threat, a reaction of a thought of subjective structure caused by a process of a mind without ipseity.